The first mass produced Oreshnik hypersonic missile system has entered service with Russia's armed forces, President Vladimir Putin announced on Friday during a briefing on the state of the military operation in Ukraine.

Russia battle-tested the new hypersonic missile in November by conducting a strike on a military factory in Ukraine. The Oreshnik missile is believed to be nuclear-capable, although Putin had previously stated its conventional form can inflict damage comparable to a low-yield nuclear explosion.

Putin ordered the serial production of the hypersonic missile system following a successful field test last year.

Now, the first mass produced Orenshik missile has been completed and has already been delivered to Russian forces, the president announced during Friday's briefing.

He also noted that the question of supplying Oreshnik missiles to Belarus will likely be resolved by the end of the year, adding that specialists from both countries are now working on preparing positions for the system's future deployment.

Putin also announced that Russian forces are advancing along the entire conflict front line, including in the border zone, the Donetsk and Lugansk Republics, as well as in Russia's Zaporozhye and Kherson regions. The president attributed the success to the courage and heroism of Russian soldiers.

Commenting on Russia's recent liberation of Chasov Yar, formerly a pivotal Ukrainian stronghold in Donetsk Region, Putin stressed that Moscow is taking back what is its own, not seizing foreign territory.

The Russian president reiterated that Moscow remains open to negotiations, stating that they are "always in demand and always important, especially if it is based on a desire for peace."

Last month, Russia and Ukraine conducted their third round of direct negotiations in Istanbul, Türkiye. The meeting lasted about 40 minutes after which the two sides agreed to exchange prisoners of war and the bodies of slain soldiers and civilians. Russia also proposed the creation of three online working groups to more swiftly resolve political, military and humanitarian issues.

People wants Putin/Russia to erase Ukraine or end Zelensky. However, I think Putin is not playing around and waiting for nothing, he is patient for a purpose, he might be interested in much bigger game than just ukraine

They were complaining that the roads in the EU are not fit for heavy military traffic: Who needs roads when the missiles/rockets are airborne?!

Peace through strength. tell the US they stop their wars or Russia will destroy their aircraft carrier fleets, and ask them the question, would the US be the country that launched a nuclear attack that would destroy the world, which would mean that President Tariff's policies fail

Uh oh: Indian state refiners have stopped purchasing Russian oil after a stern warning from US President Donald Trump. India, the world's third-largest importer of oil, is the biggest buyer of seaborne Russian crude, but the country's state refiners have not sought Russian crude in the past week or so, sources familiar with the refiners' purchase plans told Reuters.

I thought so too, but after Yahweh revealed His existence to me, I'm beginning to see what's going on. People of Israel might be just victims of some cult that is serving satan. They're being tested by YHWH since satan is under His command same as they were tested many times tested by HIMM, since Satan is under His command, same as they were tested many times before by the LORD for many of their wrong ways as written in the Old Testament. LORD even turned all of His faces away from tribes of Israel, abandoned them completely, but as He is ever merciful He always give a chance to repent, but only if repentance is done sincerely, otherwise it's a death wish. Hallelu Yah!

Very Interesting to compare the Oreshnik to a low-yield nuclear explosion. Putin has excluded the extremely inhumane radiation effect of nuclear explosions. It means that he wants to limit civilian casualties as much as possible, unlike typical US war policy by creating as much suffering on civilians as possible. Putin is my political hero.
