Russia demands Ukraine stop false 'child kidnapping' claims

Kiev has turned the accusations into a show for “soft-hearted Europeans,” Moscow’s top negotiator has said

Ukraine must stop making false claims about alleged “child kidnapping,” which it uses to stage a media show aimed at “soft-hearted Europeans,” Vladimir Medinsky, the head of Russia’s delegation at the Istanbul talks, has said.

Medinsky made the remarks following the second round of negotiations with Kiev’s delegation on Monday. He told journalists that Ukraine had submitted a list of 339 children affected by the conflict.

"This list shows, unfortunately, that the Ukrainian authorities have staged a show," he said. "In reality, we are talking about dozens of children – none of whom were abducted. Not a single one. These are children saved by our soldiers, at the risk of their own lives, pulled from combat zones and evacuated."

"We are looking for their parents," he added. "When parents are found, we return them."

According to Medinsky, Russia has returned 101 children to Ukraine in recent months, while Kiev has returned 22.

Moscow evacuates children from the conflict zone to save their lives and endeavours to return them to their families, Medinsky explained. Kiev nevertheless has persisted with accusations of kidnapping, which are not borne out by the actual numbers, he said.

The Russian authorities have also stressed that displaced children are not adopted in Russia, and that they are only put under guardianship or foster care to make sure they are taken care of before a return to their families can be facilitated.

"This shameful PR campaign must end," Medinsky said.

"Every child will eventually be reunited with their parents. All families will be brought back together – on both sides. We are working on it. It is a matter of honor."

Russia, stop playing the west's games. This is a known trick often used to stall wars they are loosing and can be seen right back to the Crimean war in the 19th century. Britain and France attempted to grab the land to stop Russian expanding trade towards India and failed. Now, the Civil Service and their lap dog (the British government) who are only historically trained want to try again, this time using Uki's..

Pardon me the perhaps silly questions- is your citation written in the talmud or the torah?
And does it make any difference?

Time for Ukraine to launch the next wave.

How many more do you think they have laying in wait? It would be silly to reveal everything in one blow...

Either that or they launched everything they had in anticipation of a truce so they wouldn't be stuck holding a bunch of attack material that they could no longer use.
Pretty sure 'the next wave' will be from Russia
